Columbia Paper Sues CIA for Info

Columbia University's student newspaper filed a federal lawsuit yesterday to force the Central Intelligence Agency to reveal "all past and present contractual arrangements . . . and personnel relationships" with the university.

Suing under the Freedom of Information Act, the Daily Spectator contends that the CIA has blocked its request for the information — first made last September — by either not responding or by asserting that the request was "being processed."

The Spectator said it needs the information to continue a series of articles concerning the university's relationship with the CIA.
